

Kelowna Nursing Homes

Kelowna Nursing Homes - Several decades ago, convalescent homes were much more common and popular than they are nowadays. 50 or 60 years ago, it was not uncommon for people besides the elderly to spend time in convalescent homes. Like for example, pregnant women would normally live in a convalescent home throughout and even after pregnancy. It was also not uncommon for children with disabilities or special needs to reside in a similar kind of facility until they can live close to normal lives. Advances in medication, healthcare and technology have allowed many people to manage their conditions or to receive outpatient treatment for their conditions without needing to reside in a home. Most patients who reside in convalescent homes these days are people who need long-term medical care for chronic illnesses or people who have had surgery that requires a longer time to recover.

Convalescent homes are usually confused with rest homes or nursing homes. Although they could provide the same services, convalescent homes vary from rest or nursing homes. The purpose of convalescent homes is to provide patients with long or short term care to recover from sickness, injury, or medical procedures. Convalescent home residents look forward to returning to their very own house when they are recovered. Though the general expectation is that residents will return home after they recover, there are times when they would end up living in a home for the rest of their lives. This usually happens when the patient either cannot appropriately care for themselves after their recovery or does not completely recover.

Usually, convalescent homes offer a combination of various medical assistance and employees. Due to the level of help that is usually needed, these kinds of facilities might be more expensive than standard assisted living facilities. Patients can have some of their expenses covered, depending on their medical insurance plan and possibly even government subsidies. It is vital to do some research to know if any of the costs can be covered. Meals and other amenities to assist patients in their every day lives during recovery are provided. Social gatherings and activities are often organized by employees and friends and family members are encouraged to visit patients frequently, to make the environment and recovery process as pleasant as possible. It is also not uncommon for local charities and religious organizations to visit convalescent homes to offer leisure and assistance.